

ALEXIADOU NAFSIKA

Senior Lecturer

University of Keele

School of Public Policy and Professional Practice

She completed her doctorate degree as a Rhodes Scholar at the University of Oxford, in 1999, after doing a Masters in Education (Hull 1992), and a Master of Science (Oxford 1994). She originally trained as a primary school teacher in the Dimocritio University of Thrace in Greece (1990).

She is on the editorial board of the European Educational Research Journal and the international advisory committee of the journal Research in Comparative and International Education

Research Interests

Education policy and governance and European education and education policy making.

Her current research explores issues of European Union governance of education and its relationship with national policy making. She is working with Dr Bettina Lange (Centre for socio-legal studies, Oxford) on the application of new modes of governance in education policy. Past research explored questions of education policy and social exclusion in the UK and in Europe, and work on changing professional identities with the Further Education sector.
